In elementary school, I discovered Excel and started organizing my father's truck routes so he could better maneuver his work miles and funds. Around this time I realized that math is my source of comfort so I decided to pursue a degree in finance. I soon realized that my actual passion was computers and problem-solving, and I wanted to tie in my talent for math and my knack for creating solutions. From producing my dad's first excel sheet to building full-stack applications from scratch, creating solutions has been my identity. This is why I became a software engineer, to tie in my background with the world of technology to make our lives easier.
